

SOCIAL JUSTICE AND EDUCATION, CERTIFICATE

The Certificate in Social Justice and Education examines equity in educational policy and practice. Students gain a foundational understanding of the social inequities that shape education and broader society. Students also learn how educators, students, administrators, parents, and community members have effectively responded to these inequities.

This certificate prepares UW–Madison students to critically analyze the role education policies and practices play in broader social inequalities and social justice efforts. Students connect course concepts to their own lives as well as to historical and contemporary social and educational issues in the U.S. and/or globally.
