

MIDDLE EAST STUDIES, CERTIFICATE

Given the immense importance of the Middle East and North Africa region in shaping contemporary world politics, the Middle East Studies certificate is designed to provide an interdisciplinary perspective of the region's history and contemporary dynamics and their representations across the diaspora. The Middle East Studies certificate offers a unique opportunity for students to develop their interest and knowledge of this region through a wide range of courses taught by UW–Madison professors with great expertise in the fields of political science, history, religious studies, sociology/anthropology, art history, literature, and modern languages.

The Middle East Studies certificate gives students a variety of career opportunities in international affairs, public policy, journalism, governmental institutions, education, public health, humanitarian organizations, economic development, and security, or going on to graduate school and a career in academia.